

Harsh Walia elected as coordinator for Google Developer Club of Faculty of Engineering and Technology on 24 July 2022

Harsh Walia has been selected as the new coordinator of the Google Developer Club of the Faculty of Engineering and Technology. Google Developer Club is working in the Faculty of Engineering and Technology for the last few years. Under which all the students are introduced to new technologies and technical training is given, some of the programs organized under this are mainly cloud introduction workshops, Google Developer Club activities etc. For the last few years Amritanshu Verma was running the Google Developer Club for the students of Computer Science Department, who have now completed his course, in their place many students had applied, out of which Harsh Walia a student of CSE second year has been selected to lead the google developer club.

Dr. Mayank Aggarwal, Head of the Department congratulated Harsh and also motivated to organize more and more programs in the university which is opening after the corona epidemic. Dr. Suyash Bhardwaj also congratulated Harsh and encouraged him to take the Google Developer Club to new heights. Mr. Deepak Panuli inspired Harsh to organize workshops related to new technology. Chirag Patel, who is conducting the program, has been a student of the Department of Computer Science, Faculty of Engineering and Technology and is also currently the student coordinator of the Institute Innovation Cell, said that Google Developer Club is a training and new technology platform in itself. Through which all the students get benefit in all kinds of technical education and through such programs all the students of our faculty will be able to become proficient in the coming future. About 50 students participated in the program.

